

The fourth largest province in Italy for the number of companies and the second most important for exports, Torino and its province, notwithstanding the duration of the national and international economic crisis remains confirmed as one of the primary competitive territories at a national and European level. Thanks both to a historic industrial vocation and new productive specialisations acquired in recent years, which have witnessed a new opening of the territory to the service sector and new industrial sectors, in the last year the sub-alpine province has been able to maintain its important economic weight: the provincial gdp is in fact third in the ranking of Italian provinces and is comparable, in its size to the wealth produced by countries such as the Slovak Republic and Ecuador. A foreign component that is increasingly integrated and present in significant manner also contributes to the development of the territorial socio-economic fabric and its entrepreneurial system. In 2015, thanks to the new exhibition of the Holy Shroud of Torino and EXPO 2015, which takes place in the nearby area of Milan, the territory of Torino will have new opportunities to increase its tourist traffic, already strengthened over the last decade following the organisation of large events of international importance.
